[For the Post.] Stanzas-To Mary

I met thee once, when we were young-Thy mem'ry comes o'er me yet, And weary years away from thee Do vainly whisper "go, forget:" Each breeze that fans my fevered brow Bears some enchanting word of thine, And echoes back into my heart, Some potent spell of love divine.

Still, still I see thy angel form, Thy spirit form along the glen, And thoughts of thee, dear Mary, are As ling'ring and bright as then. Ah! I am one who seeks alone 'Mid deserts for a gentle spring, But sigh to find life yields me not Such happiness thou didst bring.

I love thee, though long years have fled-A waste which Time can ne'er repair, And though this heart is sad indeed, Thy form is still reflected there. They say that I am happy still, And that I court the flatterer's tongue, But oh, believe it not, for I Am true as when we both were young.

And shall I for a moment think That tears of thine are shed for me? Dear Mary it were hard to know That I am all forgot by thee. Though I am parted from thee now, My spirit with thine own shall dwell: And heer me, for my soul again Doth whisper thee a long farewell.
